

An abscess cured

LETTERS have been arriving fairly consistently throughout the past year or two about the benefits of Forever Living aloe vera products for all sorts of canine problems, both internal and external.

Recently this steady trickle of correspondence on the subject has turned into what amounts to a flood so when I was seriously considering doing something about it, although I had had no personal experience, fate took a hand.

My Currant Bun suddenly developed a fearful abscess on the side of her neck which had developed from an ongoing sebaceous cyst. Presumably the cyst, which I had been regularly emptying every fortnight or so, had become septic and the abscess, while not appearing to bother her in the least, was huge! Visions of shaving off a huge area of her beautiful brand new coat, antibiotics and large bills spurred me into a last ditch do-it-yourself action.

I bathed the area with warm water and carefully removed the horrible contents of the abscess which contained not one but three separate cores. It was not a pleasant job but worried Currant Bun not a jot.

I then swabbed the area thoroughly with liquid Savlon and, as I had been given a small sample of the 'famous' Forever Living aloe vera gel to try, rubbed this on. Being a sceptic by nature, I held out little hope of avoiding an essential veterinary appointment within 24 hours.

No swelling

The following day, to my astonishment, the wound had healed. There was no swelling at all and so I rubbed on the rest of my small sample packet of aloe vera. Within a week I could not discover where either the original cyst or abscess had been! I am now convinced it DOES work.

JANE LILLEY

Frances Curtis wrote to say a small sample of this gel produced startling results on a friend's septic thumb which had been treated unsuccessfully by her doctor for two months. Forever Living aloe vera cured the thumb within 24 hours.

Frances spent over £1,400 on one of her Irish Setters who had a mysterious fever, enlarged spleen and necrotic lung tissue. Following eight weeks' intensive care at the Royal Veterinary College, the fever still raged; this was until Frances gave her the liquid form of aloe gel hourly together with massive doses of the same company's Bee Propolis tablets. The fever dropped within four days and she recovered.

This was all a year ago and she is now a lively, mischievous nine-year-old, despite the fact that her funeral had actually been arranged in May 1997!

Maria Jacques writes from near Newark to say that her eight-year-old Pointer suffered with gingivitis, bad breath and plaque problems. He has always been fed on a highly reputable complete diet all his life because of his colitis.

Maria massaged his gums gently with Forever Living aloe vera twice daily and used their Forever Bright Toothgel on his teeth. His bleeding gums ceased within three days and his mouth was restored to health within three weeks. Not only this but the plaque crumbled away in whole pieces without any effort with the plaque removing tool.

The Aloe Vera Drinking Gel has greatly assisted his colitis problems and he seems generally much happier with life.

Doreen Lloyd-Morris rang to tell me about her 13-year-old Border Collie, Meg, who has arthritis in one of her back legs. Her owner, who has been on Forever Living aloe vera herself for the past three years, decided to try Meg on this. She has given it to her in her food last thing at night for the past two years and ever since she started using it Meg has been a different dog, extremely active with a beautiful coat.

Meg developed sore, burning hot, itchy pads but ten minutes after spraying them with the same range of aloe vera spray, they were cool and cured. Mrs Lloyd-Morris also advocates the aloe vera soap for cleaning out ears.

No, Forever Living products are not available in shops but are sold by local distributors throughout the country. Ring me for contact numbers.

Long and loud

Marcheta Allen wrote about a rather different kind of problem, for which she pleads for help. She says that her young Golden Retriever bitch has been well socialised with both dogs and people. She loves everyone who is walking with a dog or on a bicycle in the country. However, she barks long and loudly at both couples or lone walkers without dogs.

Marcheta says she is a lovely dog in every other way but this selective barking is worrying her owner and not endearing to strangers. She would be grateful for any ideas to help.